Two brief glimpses from Bosnia, which remind us so succinctly, that while human society has its successes and travails, the natural world continues unchanging. In 'Storm', rain dashes on the windows of the taxi and as thunder rumbles, the driver sings to a tender song. Through his half open window we see the comfortable houses, the parked cars and destroyed churches speed by.

A roadway patch of water becomes in 'Pool', a mute observer and a passive recipient of the human scene; it will adapt and survive.
