A quiet day in Chesterfield - Wednesday half-day closing. Nicola Atkinson Davidson arrives in town to document a trip through its streets. The artist charts her journey, capturing on film the normally unobserved everyday activities of people going about their business between two different points - within their own vanishing point. Are they going home, to work or engaged in other business which is perhaps not so mundane? This work enables the populace of Chesterfield to focus on a hitherto unnoticed time in their town's history, establishing an indelible image of a moment which would be naturally forgotten.
